The Pennsylvania Main Line of Public Works & The Underground Railroad

Thursday, September 14
5pm Reception | 5:30pm Panel at LancasterHistory

NOTE FOR MEDIA: A dedicated press release about "The Pennsylvania Mainline" will be disseminated soon. Please check back at our Press Room for this release at a later date.

On Thursday, September 14, join LancasterHistory as we welcome an esteemed panel of presenters to discuss abolitionists and activists throughout southern Pennsylvania who used actual railroads as part of the Underground Railroad activity that helped formerly enslaved people to escape to freedom.

The Philadelphia & Columbia Railroad began operations in 1834 and shortly thereafter, antislavery activists began using the 80-mile route to assist men and women fleeing slavery. This panel discussion will highlight the stories of William Whipper, Stephen Smith, Thaddeus Stevens, and others throughout southern Pennsylvania. Among these stories is that of Whipper, Smith, and Quaker William Wright, all of Columbia in Lancaster County. These three men worked together to create secret compartments in the lumber hauling cars of Smith and Whipper, beginning in 1838 and continuing until at least 1855, to assist freedom seekers in their journey north.

Today, the Philadelphia & Columbia Railroad is recognized by the National Park Service's Network to Freedom as an actual railroad that was used as part of what became known as the Underground Railroad. Presenters for this event and discussion include Randy Harris, Dr. Leroy Hopkins, Jr., John Sigmund, and Dr. Barbara Zaborowski, moderated by Lenwood Sloan. Complete bios for each speaker and the moderator are available on LancasterHistory's website.

I Am Somebody: The Trailblazing Career of Madeline Anderson

NOTE FOR MEDIA: A dedicated press release about "I Am Somebody" will be disseminated soon. Please check back at our Press Room for this release at a later date.

Join LancasterHistory on Saturday, September 23 for a screening of two documentary films directed by the acclaimed Madeline Anderson. Integration Report 1 (1960) documents the struggle for Black equality in Alabama, Brooklyn, and Washington, D.C. I Am Somebody (1970) tells the story of Black hospital workers who went on strike in Charleston, South Carolina.

Madeline Anderson was born in 1924 in Lancaster, Pennsylvania... and dreamt of becoming a director from a young age. It was while studying psychology at NYU that she found an unlikely entry into the world of professional filmmaking by answering a babysitting ad for documentarian Richard Leacock and his wife. The direct cinema innovator would become her mentor, and she would make her groundbreaking first film Integration Report 1 (1960) at his Andover Productions. In 1967 she directed A Tribute to Malcolm X for William Greaves' legendary public TV show Black Journal, in close collaboration with X's widow, Betty Shabazz. Anderson's rich [...] career includes films made for the Ford Foundation (1975's The Walls Come Tumbling Down) and the Children's Television Workshop (Sesame Street), where she became their first female supervising editor and an in-house producer. She now lives in Brooklyn. (Biography from Le Cinema Club)

"I Am Somebody," a Collections Up Close program, takes place on Saturday, September 23 at 2pm at LancasterHistory. Tickets are $10/Adults (18+) and $5/Students (17 and Under). Buchanan's Legacy to Lincoln

Thursday, September 28
5pm Reception | 5:30pm Lecture at LancasterHistory

NOTE FOR MEDIA: A dedicated press release about "Buchanan's Legacy to Lincoln" will be disseminated soon. Please check back at our Press Room for this release at a later date.

On Thursday, September 28, join LancasterHistory as we welcome Dr. Louise Stevenson, Professor Emerita at Franklin & Marshall College, to discuss the intersection of the African slave trade, the circulation of Chinese labor, and American foreign policy in the 1850s.

James Buchanan is recognized for many things, but few know about his advocacy of humanitarian reform in Cuba before the Civil War. During his presidency, Buchanan's foreign policy aimed to end the horrors of the human trafficking of African and Chinese peoples to Cuba.

To satisfy the sweet tooth of Europeans and Americans, the sugar industry boomed in Cuba, resulting in the increase of labor required to keep meeting demand. Cuban demand for laborers created a lucrative trade of enslaved Africans and forcibly indentured Chinese individuals. Proslavery Democrats and Buchanan projected that the brutal human trafficking would end if America annexed Cuba, but slavery would continue in the United States. How do we make sense of Buchanan's humanitarian concern for Cuba but apathy towards slavery in the United States? Join us on September 28 for this interesting lecture to learn more!

Louise L. Stevenson, Ph.D., Professor emerita of history and American studies at Franklin & Marshall College in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, writes about nineteenth-century American cultural and intellectual life in its transatlantic context. Her most recent book, Lincoln in the Atlantic World (Cambridge, September 2015), follows her Scholarly Means to Evangelical Ends: The New Haven Scholars and the Transformation of Higher Learning in America, 1830-1890 (Johns Hopkins, 1986), The Victorian Homefront: American Thought and Culture, 1860-1880 (1991, new ed. Cornell, 2001), and articles on books and reading in everyday life from the best sellers of the eighteenth-century through Harry Potter. President Clinton nominated her as a trustee to the James Madison Memorial Scholarship Foundation. For almost three decades, she has served as an officer of the Lancaster County League of Women Voters.
